great pleasure to introduce a gentleman known at the Cabinet-table as the oldest member of the Cabinet. Old as he is, he is not so old but he remembers that he was born within the limits of the Old Dominion-Colonel Richard W. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy. ecretary Thompson said : Fellow-Citizens,-It has been about a quarter of a century since I was in the capital of my native State. Within that time I have heard that the Old Dominion had been depopulated. I do not believe it now. [Great laughter.] I am sure it is not, but that it is still the old State it was in the past. Since I left Virginia and become a citizen of another part of this Union terrible times have intervened. We have been through a bloody and angry war, but peace formed in the following order: has returned. We are here to-day under the flag of our fathers to congratulate each other in a restored and reenfranchised Union-a Union cemented by the blood of the best patriots the world ever saw, in the ranks of whom stood foremost the sons of old Virginia. [Applause.] Now, their children having inherited their fortune and patriotism, is it not our duty to inquire what the future demands of us? You hear a great deal of the policy of the Government. What is that policy? It is nothing more than infusing into the minds of the people a trust of each other. We who live in the North are ready to trust you. We have a right to require of you to trust us. That is all there is about it. There is nothing so bad about It simply involves reunion on either side. The responsibility rests upon us. We boast that we have the best institutions in the world. Nobody doubts it. These institutions were created for you and me-not for to-day, but for all time; for our children after we are gone. Then, we have resting upon us the responsibility to preserve them for our children still. We may disagree and wrangle about local interests, about the rights of States, and that sort. There is reason of a national interest to maintain and support the old national flag and preserve the Union. I believe the Union is stronger to-day than it ever was-stronger than it was before the late war between the traction been great. There was a desire not sections-for the reason because we are beginning to understand there is no difference between the sections. We are in possession of abundant territory. We have an intelligent people-bonest, enterprising. Can we not, therefore, in the future, as in the past, unite our energies in building up this Government so that it shall shed its influence over the entire world? I am a native Virginian. I am no less a Virginian to-day than I was seventy years ago. I love the old State. Into your hands is confided her honor and destiny. With that I have nothing to do; but you shall not rob me of crowd their white plumes waved majestimy interest in her great name. It is mine as well as yours. Let me assure you that it is a matter of personal interest to hear of the returning prosperity of your State. There are none in my section who will not rejoice to see these hills and valleys pour forth their wealth and reward your faithful enterprise. I believe there is no State in wealth than yours. By energy you may develop that wealth to an untold unoccupied window or porch along the degree. ATTORNEY-GENERAL DEVENS. Massachusetts—the Attorney-General of the General Devens: Mr. Mayor and Fellow-Citizens,-Although the skies form a weeping canopy above our heads, they are lightened by your smiles and the heartiness of your welcome. I thank you for my share of it. It is on occasions like this we are :eminded we are citizens of a common country. We have great geographical divisions and party divisions, to which the Mayor alluded; but all of us, whether Republicans or Democrats, recognize that there is a great bond of union large enough to overcome and overwhelm anything that there may be of division. That bond binds the citizens of a common country. Come prosperity or adversity, our joys or our sorrows are enjoyed by all-are to be borne by all. There is nothing in any administration of our Government-just, wise, and right-which has not a benefit for every man in it. There is nothing unfortunate but every citizen must suffer. Let us, therefore, stand together. The people, though divided into different States, are bound together by the great bond of the Constitution. We recognize that bond as forever inseparable. I know, fellow-citizens, we have passed through a great struggle, which has not faded from the heart and memory of any of us; yet, when it has come to the end, and tinue the compliment, as he thought, to a Infantry of Williamsburg reached the city when results are accepted cordially, no more can be asked. When this is done, all but seeing before the act was half perform-Self most unhappy, and my effort for the Union a failure, if it shall not finally be found, as our history progresses, that one of the results was for the benefit of the South as well as the North of it shall is done. President Hayes: Fellow-citizens, it is hardly fair that only one department of the Government should be represented in these talks before you; therefore, as there are members of Congress present, it seems to be remarkable if they should be left out. ther things: Having completed a searching examination into the affairs of the New York Life-Insurance Company, it affords him unqualified pleasure to be able to make public the gratifying fact that the result is most satisfactory. Every item of liability, real and actual, or contingent, as sworn to by the officers in the last annual report made to the Department, has been closely scrutinized, and the statements in said report found to be true to the letter, and no other liabilities were found to exist. The system of bookkeeping adopted by the company after many years of experience seems to be perfect, judged by the hardest test that could be applied under the law.

The net surplus over all liabilities amounts to $5, 962,878.70. He finds the title to all property on which the company holds mortgages, or which it owns entirely, satisfactory, and the valuations of the department of such property agree substantially with those of the company. The cash securities of the company, costing $9,730,529.91, are of the most exceptionable character, and are worth $580,-515.76 more than cost. The total gross assets amount to $33,199,869.45.
